Julie Navickas Wins a Literary Global Book Award for Fiction: Romance

Bloomington, ILL—Julie Navickas is the recipient of a Literary Global Book Award for the book titled I Loved You Yesterday. The book is honored in the fiction: romance category.

The Literary Global Book Awards are a stand out as the most inclusive international literary competition worldwide. With an array of categories, this award caters to a wide range of literary genres and themes, offering a platform for diverse voices and narratives.

“Our contests were purposefully designed to draw in a remarkable and varied array of authors and publishers from every corner of the world,” said a Literary Global Book Award spokesperson. “We aim to establish ourselves as the largest and most inclusive literary competition. This underscores our commitment to celebrating diversity, talent, and literary excellence from a global perspective. It’s a testament to the universality and enduring power of storytelling, uniting voices from all cultures and backgrounds in the shared love of literature.”

Navickas said, "Being selected as a winner is an incredible honor. I am grateful to be recognized for the hard work and dedication that went into my debut title. I hope this award will inspire others to pursue their own literary passions."
